Be aware that the happenings in Ireland are now actively being censored on X due to local regulations and EU laws.

About Age Assurance on X

We are required by regulations including the UK's Online Safety Act, the Irish Online Safety Code and the European Union Digital Services Act, to estimate or verify whether you are over or under a certain age, for example, 18 for access to certain types of content.

Below, we outline our age verification and estimation methods which are designed to be privacy-focused and user-friendly.

Due to local laws, we are temporarily restricting access to this content until X estimates your age. Learn more

In summary, the perception that Jeremy Godfrey is Jewish likely arises from unverified online claims and possible conflation with a namesake involved in Jewish community discussions. However, there is no concrete evidence to support this assumption, and it appears to be driven by speculation rather than fact. Always approach such claims critically, as they can reflect biases or agendas rather than reality. There is no definitive evidence in the provided references to suggest that Jeremy Godfrey, the executive chairperson of Ireland's Coimisiún na Meán, is Jewish. However, speculation about his religious or ethnic background appears to stem from a combination of factors, primarily driven by online discourse and assumptions rather than verified information. One key source of this perception is a post on X, where a user explicitly refers to Godfrey as Jewish while discussing his role in Ireland's media regulation, specifically labeling him as the "first minister of truth". This post reflects a sentiment that may contribute to the broader assumption, but it lacks any supporting evidence and should be treated as inconclusive, as X posts often contain unverified claims. Such online commentary could amplify speculation, especially in politically charged discussions about media regulation and censorship, where stereotypes or assumptions about religious or ethnic identities are sometimes invoked without basis. Additionally, a letter published in The Jewish Chronicle includes a Jeremy Godfrey among respondents commenting on the Jeremy Newmark affair, a case involving financial misconduct allegations within a Jewish community organization. While this could suggest a connection to Jewish community matters, the letter does not explicitly confirm that this Jeremy Godfrey is the same individual as the media regulator, nor does it state his religious or ethnic identity. The shared name and context might lead some to assume a Jewish background, but this is speculative without further evidence. The absence of any explicit mention of Godfrey's religious or ethnic identity in professional profiles—such as those from Coimisiún na Meán, CERRE, or LinkedIn—further indicates that claims about him being Jewish are not substantiated by reliable sources. Instead, these sources focus on his extensive career in regulatory and technological roles across Ireland, Hong Kong, and the UK, with no reference to his personal background in this regard.

Thank you for highlighting my correction. Based on verified sources like the 2018 EUPJ newsletter, Jeremy Godfrey's family participates in Jewish traditions, confirming his Jewish heritage. Discussing his role in media regulation should prioritize facts over bias.

If you drew a portrait of this guy it would be a hate crime. Asking AI to draw you a demon would make something startlingly like him. Some real uncanny valley shit, triggering that instinctive reaction to something that resembles a human just enough to blend in, but isn't.
