!! BREAKING: FBI Director Kash Patel's Gmail account was hacked by Iranian nation-state hackers.

They have published his entire inbox, including mails on his home in India, private life, personal data, business dealings and travel history (Havana, Cuba!).

Honestly if it's just cigars and goofy faces, I'm actually impressed. Usually, you expose a high-up government officials personal emails (Hillary, Epstein, etc) you get some crazy corruption or lizard people type stuff. It sucks his gmail got compromised, but eh, if he kept work and personal separate, then all is well as far as I'm concerned.

I wonder if this is just an old email address that he stopped using years ago and all it took was a basic password spray or something to get into.

No nudes ;-)

There's a lot more to be seen within the mails..

Not them leaking everything but the details still sound like a vague movie trailer. where's the actual substance? 🤔

That's crazy, this is a serious reminder that no one is completely safe online, not even top officials.

So the FBI Director can't even secure his own email... and we're supposed to trust national security?

Are we sure this isn't something deeper? Nation-state hackers don't just “randomly” pick targets like this.

Gmail hack in 2026? That's either extremely embarrassing or extremely suspicious.

This is wild if true—but context matters. Reports say it was his personal Gmail, not official FBI systems, and the data leaked is mostly old, non-classified stuff. Still a serious breach, but not the “national security collapse” people are making it sound like.

Cyber warfare is getting messy though... this is more about intimidation and optics than actual intelligence damage.

If that's actually true, that's a pretty big security breach... but right now it's all over the place with unverified claims, so it's hard to know what's real and what's being exaggerated
